Introduction

As all language learners know, when learning a language, all parts of the language are learned using certain skills. They are reading, writing, listening, speaking and grammar skills. With the help of these skills, a foreign language is mastered perfectly. In my article, I discussed in detail the grammar skill among these skills. Because grammar is the main basis of the language, and knowing the grammar of the foreign language you are learning means that your other skills, especially your writing and speaking skills, are much better. Before writing this article, I have studied several articles related to grammar, and I have incorporated some of the ideas presented in them into this article.

Literature review

The first resource is Karina Bertolino, in “Subject ellipsis in early child English”, argues that the omission of subjects in the grammar of children acquiring English cannot be explained by the null subject parameter, in any of its versions (parameter mis-setting or resetting). Her reasoning relies on empirical endings. She argues that the pattern of subject omission in child English is a case of subject ellipsis, an option available for English-speaking adults (‘diary drop’).

The second idea is written by Shraddhakamble. Actually, I pay attention to the way that some characters in TV series express themselves, also the dialogue between them. It helps a lot to understand the proper way to build and use good grammar in conversations. It does not an ad, but using the Grammarly extension on your computer and smartphone, will help you to recognize those common mistakes. So, enjoy and learn while you're watching TV series, and do not be afraid to write.

The third resource is this one. When we learn English, we run into a lot of confusing things when it comes to grammar. Often we don’t understand certain things that native English speakers say because they simply don’t exist in our native language. But don’t despair! In this article, you’ll find ten tips that can help you improve your knowledge of English grammar rules, and one bonus piece of advice about how to memorize verb tenses from YouTube teaching expert, Bob the Canadian.

Data collection

The questionnaire I created is aimed at teaching and improving the grammar skill of language learners at beginner level. Before preparing this questionnaire, I read several articles and interviews related to the topic. Then I gathered information related to the topic of grammar and prepared questions related to the grammar part of English that is relevant for beginner English learners. I have compiled seven questions about teaching and improving grammar to beginner learners. And I had to survey based on the questions I made. I chose the Google form platform to create this survey, because I was familiar with it and I had created several surveys before. I had no problems creating this survey and getting answers to my questions. I sent the created survey to many of my acquaintances who are learning English and they expressed their opinions on my questions because of the topic I chose was interesting

Data Analysis

1. A total of 46 teachers and students participated in this survey. The research showed that 60.9 percent of teachers and students who participated in the survey believe that grammar rules are very important, 30.4 % believe that they are important and 8.7 % believe that they are not important in learning English.

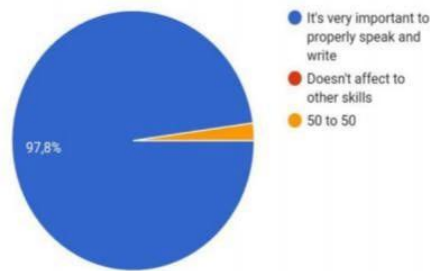

67.4 percent of language learners learned English from various grammar books, and the remaining 32.6 percent through video lessons.

3. All the language learners who participated in this survey are supporters of teaching English grammar in an interactive way.

84.8 % of students and teachers found it boring to explain big topics while teaching English grammar. And 15.2 percent of them said that they like this process and actually try to explain it.

4. 97.8 percent of the participants in the survey believed that grammar is very important for speaking and writing skills and the remaining few did not affect other skills.

5. 43.5 percent of people believe that focusing all students' attention, 32.6% of students in a group are of different levels and 23.9 percent of people believe that grammar is more boring than other skills, which causes various difficulties in teaching English grammar.

41.3 % of people prefer to study English grammar with a teacher, 26.1 % with group and 32.6 percent of people prefer to study grammar individually.

Conclusion and Recommendation

In conclusion, I can say that after considering the above points, I am once again convinced that I did not make a mistake in covering the grammar skill for my article. Because for foreign language learners, grammar is the most painful part of this language. Especially those at the beginner level think that learning the grammar part of the language is a very boring and long-lasting process, and they expressed their support for learning a foreign language without grammar with the help of various audio films. While gathering resources for my article, I witnessed that some foreign language teachers even mentioned that teaching grammar is more difficult than teaching other skills. When I talked to English language learners around me, they confirmed that grammar is a very boring skill for them too. And they mentioned that they focused more on other skills when they were learning English. That is why there are still many mistakes and shortcomings, especially in their writing and speaking. I think it depends on how you approach the process, and there are many easy and fun ways to teach and improve grammar. I've covered these in detail in my article, and I've shared what people think about how there are a number of fun and easy ways to improve your grammar. I think this article is useful not only for beginners who want to improve their English grammar, but also for all English learners and teachers.
